Walking and biking- albeit within limited distances- are actually the two only activities permitted under lockdown: vital precious resources for citizens suddenly immobilized but also opportunities for a surprising-rediscovery of familiar places and small everyday itineraries, through fresh and estranged eyes which are compelled by restrictions hardly imagined in the time of "the old normal". As John Berger remarked in a memorable study on the "ways of seeing", "we only see what we look at" (Berger, 1972), and our gaze is never neutral but always 'affected': affected or guided or compelled by circumstances, physical, spatial, meteorological, emotional. Our sight is always dynamic, we can see differently the same thing- spaces and places can be perceived differently. I am sure this is happening to many of us in Covid-19 time.
