6th April. Newspaper scraps, TV news, web views, cinema, cartoons, poetry, modern criticism- the everyday life runs with the noises and the images of current news, but we live in a mediatic/oneiric landscape. Technology sustains our dreams and fears and hopes, envisaging surreal 'worlds' and landscapes that far from being virtual are now dramatically real. We find ourselves protagonists of narrations once dystopic and now attached to everyday actual life, left unable to set imagination apart from reality [...]. We anxiously wait for signs of resurgence. After four weeks of lockdown, by a new decree we are allowed to walk, still unaccompanied, still within 250 metres of our homes, and once again conquer pieces of the city again, step by step, as hundreds of City Council posters promise at every corner. What I have in mind are casual itineraries day by day imagined, from my house going North, South, East and West, to cover as many semicircles countable on the space contingently designed by the decree: a sketch-map for an invented new space that I would strictly respect taking it as a kind of formal and visual experiment planned over 20 days.
